As one of England's most enduringly successful character actors, Robert Hardy is noted for his versatility and depth. He has been recognized for his roles in film and television for over 50 years.

Some of his past work includes the overbearing Siegfried Farnon in "All Creatures Great and Small" (1978) but his most critically acclaimed performance was as the title character of "Winston Churchill: The Wilderness Years" (1981). His portrayal of Britain's wartime leader was so accurately observed that, in the following years, he was called on to reprise the role in such productions as "The Woman He Loved" (1988) (TV) and "War and Remembrance" (1988).

More recently, Robert has played key roles in "Sense and Sensibility" (1995) and in the wildly successful international blockbuster franchise "Harry Potter" as the slightly daft Minister of Magic, Cornelius Fudge. Robert has been awarded the CBE for services to acting.
